Safeguarding Australia's Military Secrets

The Safeguarding Australia's Military Secrets legislation is designed to protect Australia's military secrets and strengthen our national security.

Some Australian citizens and permanent residents may need to apply for a foreign work authorisation when working for, or on behalf of, a foreign military or government body.

A foreign work authorisation may also be required for individuals providing training to a foreign military organisation or government body.

SAMS briefing sessions are available to register.

The Safeguarding Australia's Military Secrets (SAMS) program supports Australia's commitment to protecting its military secrets and strengthening national security.

On 8 April 2024, an amendment Part IXAA to the Defence Act 1903 was given Royal Assent. This amendment is intended to assist in addressing current and evolving foreign security threats through the introduction of a requirement for some individuals in specific circumstances to seek foreign work authorisation.

The requirement for a foreign work authorisation strengthens Australia's security by preventing individuals from disclosing or exploiting classified military or related information.

Date of commencement

From 6 May 2024, Part IXAA of the Defence Act 1903 requires the individuals listed below to assess their requirement for a foreign work authorisation.

- Former members of the Australian Defence Force, Defence Australian Public Servants and Australian Submarine Agency, who will work for a foreign military or foreign government body.
- All Australian citizens or permanent residents providing training to a foreign military or government body that is related to:
 - Part 1 of the Defence and Strategic Goods List
